IDENTITY AND INTERESTS OF AMICI CURIAE VETERANS

Amici are veterans—former officers and enlisted men—who strongly support the right of all veterans, including those under age 65, to vote by mail on the same terms as veterans 65 and older and service members on active duty overseas. Amici view this as a non-partisan issue. Every man and woman who serves our nation deserves the right to be treated equally in exercising the constitutional right to vote.

Admiral Charles S. Abbot, retired 4-star, was Deputy Commander, European Command (1998-2000) and Commander, U. S. 6th Fleet (1996-1998). He served 16 years (2003-2019) under three Presidents as President and CEO of Navy-Marine Corps Relief Society, the Department of the Navy’s Military Charity whose mission is the health and safety of sailors and Marines.

William J. Boatman served as a Combat Corpsman (medic) with the Marines in Vietnam. Classified by the Veterans Administration as 100% disabled due to Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder (“PTSD”) and Agent Orange exposure, he is Texas Chair for PTSD Education and Outreach for the Vietnam Veterans of America.

General Wesley K. Clark, retired 4-star, was wounded in action leading an infantry company in Vietnam. He served as Supreme Allied Commander, Europe (1997-2000) and Commander-in-Chief, U. S. Southern Command (1996-1999).

Donald P. Dorsey of Port Neches, Texas enlisted at 22 years old in the Marine Corps and served as a squad leader running assassination and reconnaissance missions in Vietnam. Classified by the VA as 100% disabled due to PTSD, he is President of the Texas Association of Vietnam Veterans and helped achieve national settlement for veterans suffering the debilitating effects of Agent Orange.

Hon. Joe R. Reeder graduated from West Point in 1970 and was a Ranger in the U.S. Army's 82nd Airborne Division. He later served as the 14th Undersecretary of the Army from 1993 to 1997. He worked closely with the Army Surgeon General and Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs on PTSD. As Chairman of the Panama Canal, he was deeply involved in protecting military and Canal employees from the Dengue virus, carried by the same mosquito species that killed tens of thousands with yellow fever in the building of the Canal. A University of Texas Law School graduate, as a public service he has helped veterans inform courts on issues affecting active duty and retired military and their families.

TEXAS VETERANS UNDER AGE 65

Amici file this brief out of respect for nearly 1 million Texas veterans who are affected by the preliminary injunction at issue in this appeal. The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs projects that as of September 30, 2020, there will be 1,552,000

Texas veterans and 926,000 of them will be under age 65.¹ The vast majority of veterans under 65 served in “Gulf War I” (pre 9/11) or in “Gulf War II” (post 9/11).²

Younger veterans include many servicemen and servicewomen who suffered combat zone injuries and other exposures that compromise their immune systems, making in-person voting especially dangerous to their health.

Many Gulf War I veterans breathed air poisoned by the oil field fires set by Saddam Hussein’s army as it retreated from Kuwait, and by the chemicals employed to suppress those fires.³ These emissions have documented effects on the health and well-being of the exposed veterans.⁴

Likewise, many Gulf War II veterans breathed air poisoned from burn pits destroying ammunition containing depleted uranium and other toxic substances.⁵ While research is ongoing, these emissions appear to have long-term effects on the health and well-being of the exposed veterans.⁶

Finally, many veterans, young and old, suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder brought on or aggravated by the tension of living under unremitting threat of ambush and improvised explosive devices as well as being under fire.⁷ PTSD is associated with adverse physical health conditions, including known risk factors for COVID-19 like cardiovascular disease.⁸

The question Amici focus on is whether veterans under age 65 will be permitted to vote by mail, avoiding the inevitable risks to their health and well-being that would result from being forced to congregate to vote in person. This is a matter of substantial importance to every man and woman who has served in our nation's armed forces.

INTRODUCTION

The district court’s preliminary injunction authorizes veterans (and all other Texas voters) under age 65 to vote by mail on the same terms as all Texas voters 65 and older. It rests on the conclusion that, under the extraordinary circumstances of the pandemic, refusing to allow voters under age 65 to vote by mail on the same terms as older voters unreasonably burdens their right to vote.

That conclusion is amply supported. As the frontline medical professionals’ brief explains in detail, forcing a voter to vote in person or not at all in the July run-off and November general election imposes serious health burdens on the right to vote. Amici are especially concerned about the burden imposed on their fellow veterans under age 65 whose service to our country has placed them in high-risk categories, making voting in person especially perilous. As discussed in the preceding section, there are nearly 1 million Texas veterans under 65. Like veterans age 65 and older, many suffer from PTSD and from combat zone exposures that have damaged their immune systems.

Established principles of constitutional law prohibit forcing them to choose between risking their health or losing their right to vote when older veterans are not required to make that same choice. Accordingly, the preliminary injunction should not be disturbed and the administrative stay should be dissolved.

ARGUMENT

I. There is no constitutionally acceptable reason veterans under 65 must risk their health to vote, while veterans 65 and over can vote by mail.

The Veterans Amici do not wish to duplicate the arguments set forth in the briefs of the litigants. We hope our unique perspective brings into sharper focus the constitutional infirmity of the State's attempt to discriminate between voters over and under 65.

Veterans 65 and over may elect to vote by mail, whether based on service injury or condition or lack of immunity to COVID-19 or for any other reason. Texas law affords them that right without any second-guessing by the State.

In contrast, veterans under 65 must request a ballot based on their judgment that they have a sickness or physical condition that prevents them from voting in person without a likelihood of injury to their health. State law provides no clear answer as to which veterans do, and which do not, have such conditions.

Specifically, the Texas Supreme Court has just this evening issued opinions that make one thing clear: county clerks are not empowered to deny any vote by mail requests that check the disability box. But those opinions leave unclear, and dependent on each individual's own facts and circumstances, which voters do, and which do not, have sicknesses or conditions or combinations of sicknesses and conditions that comply with the statute.

Thus, veterans under 65 cannot know for sure whether or not they are entitled to vote by mail. That means every younger veteran faces a dilemma no older veteran faces. Each younger veteran must choose whether to risk health by voting in person, or risk legal consequences by requesting a mail ballot.

A. The State is unlikely to prevail on the merits of its appeal defending the disparate treatment of voters based on age.

To demonstrate that it is likely to prevail on the merits of its appeal from the preliminary injunction, the State must show that such statutory discrimination against voters under 65 as to voting by mail is “narrowly drawn to advance a state interest of compelling importance.”⁹

The State suggests that the state interest of compelling importance is greater potential for fraud in voting by mail instead of in person. The litigants, noting that most states allow all voters to vote by mail without having to give any excuse, urge that the State’s stated concern is a pretext.

Without wading into those partisan waters, Amici note that discrimination between voters under and over 65 is not narrowly drawn to prevent fraud in voting. The concern applies equally to voters over 65, but the State considers its electoral system secure enough to ensure election integrity as to those voters over 65 who choose to vote by mail. If so, the State's electoral system is secure enough to ensure election integrity as to voters under 65.

There is no constitutional basis for the distinction. To bring the infirmity into sharper focus, consider veterans of different ages but with similar health conditions.

Why should every Vietnam War veteran be free to vote by mail once he has reached 65, but none the year before, unless he meets the disputed standard? How is that distinction narrowly drawn to prevent voter fraud?

Why should some Gulf War veterans be able to vote by mail, but comrades in arms may or may not be, given the vagaries of the state law interpretation dispute? How is that distinction narrowly drawn to prevent voter fraud?

Why should a veteran of the war in Afghanistan who is under 65 have to decide whether or not to risk prosecution if he files a vote by mail request, because he does not know whether or not his exposure to depleted uranium would satisfy the Attorney General? How is that distinction narrowly drawn to prevent voter fraud?

Amici respectfully submit that veterans who risked their lives in the Persian Gulf cannot be treated differently from those who fought in the European or Pacific theaters in World War II, on the Korean Peninsula, in Vietnam, or anywhere else our nation has sent its sons and daughters. Disparate treatment is abhorrent in every setting. Its consequences are especially stark in the context of men and women who have worn the same uniform at different times or with different health consequences.

The Veterans Amici respectfully suggest the following principle is “simple enough.”¹⁰ Concerns about fraud in voting by mail must be applied on neutral bases to all voters regardless of whether they are over 65 or under 65. “If the system is secure enough to ensure the integrity of the former, then it ought to be secure enough to ensure the integrity of the latter.”¹¹

The constitutional principles are examined in the litigants’ briefs. Veterans remind us that those cherished constitutional principles were not bought cheaply but at great price—and should be defended by the courts with equal vigor.

B. Voters, not the State, face irreparable injury.

Consider now those Texas veterans under 65 who are “unable to exercise their right to vote” in 2020 because they are (or may or may not be) unable to vote by mail and unwilling to risk their well-being by congregating at the polls. They will lose “a right they will never be able to recover.”¹² That is true “irreparable injury.”

By contrast, voter fraud can be addressed by prosecutions in the context of specific cases. The State suffers no irreparable injury by being required to exercise its police power in a handful of real cases after the fact rather than by deterring millions of voters from safely exercising their constitutional rights in the first place.

¹⁰ Stringer v. Whitley, 942 F.3d 715, 726 (5th Cir. 2019) (Ho, J., concurring).

¹² Id.

C. The public interest favors denial of the stay.

The public interest is especially important as to a preliminary injunction that protects the right to vote in response to well-documented public health concerns. That public interest is personified, in one of its dimensions, by a veteran who risked his or her life to preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States of America but is now chilled from exercising the most fundamental feature of that Constitution—the right to vote—to protect his or her personal health.

Combat veterans are men and women who have run great risks, and by the millions suffered grievous and lasting injuries to their health in doing so, to protect this country and the rights we hold most dear, notably including the right to vote.

They ran those risks and suffered those injuries because our elected leaders decided genuinely compelling interests made it necessary to do so. Requiring nearly a million Texas veterans under 65 to run additional risks by voting in person this July and November, risks that are wholly unnecessary and older veterans need not face, is neither constitutionally justified nor in the public interest.

CONCLUSION

Veteran Amici respectfully request that the administrative stay be lifted and the preliminary injunction remain in place pending appeal.

Respectfully submitted,
