

over the claims asserted against the County Defendants, and the County Defendants, therefore, request that the Court dismiss all claims against them pursuant to Fed. R. Civ. P. 12(b)(1) and (6).

A. Plaintiffs Have Failed to Allege a Sufficiently Definite Injury in Fact.

Plaintiffs attempt to argue in their Response that they plead facts sufficient to establish a concrete “diversion of resources” injury for each organizational plaintiff. [Doc. 57, pp. 5-9]. However, Plaintiffs acknowledge in their own explanation of the ruling in Common Cause Indiana v. Lawson, 937 F.3d 944 (7th Cir. 2019) that “standing cannot be based on resources expended to do what the organization was already doing.” If you look at the allegations in the Amended Complaint, it is apparent that Plaintiffs are simply expending resources to do what they were already doing, simply with updated information and messaging.

Further, this Court has previously ruled in Ga. Ass'n of Latino Elected Officials, Inc. v. Gwinnett Cty. Bd. of Registrations & Elections, 499 F. Supp. 3d 1231, 1240 (N.D. Ga. 2020), that organizational plaintiffs must show “what they would have to divert resources away from in order to spend additional resources on combatting the effects of [SB 202]. If a plaintiff claims that part of its mission is to educate and inform voters regarding voting laws, “there is no indication that [a plaintiff] would in fact be diverting any resources away from the core activities it already engages in by continuing to educate and inform...voters.” Id.

This exact scenario of “diverting resources” from its core activities to use for the same core activities is precisely what Plaintiffs have alleged in the Amended Complaint. In support of their assertions of a cognizable injury, Plaintiffs simply include general references to the allegations of Amended Complaint [Doc. 57, p. 6, citing FAC ¶¶ 13-27 ¶¶ 28-40, 41-46, 47-52, 53-58, and 61-70)] and claim that County Defendants are ignoring binding precedent such as CommonCause/Ga. v. Billups, 554 F.3d 1340, 1350–51 (11th Cir. 2009) [Doc. 57, p. 6].

However, it is Plaintiffs who are ignoring more recent precedent by failing to explain what activities resources will be diverted from to engage in these new activities. Jacobson v. Fla. Sec’y of State, 974 F.3d 1236 (11th Cir. 2020) (“Although resource diversion is a concrete injury, neither [witness] explained what activities the [organizational plaintiffs] would divert resources away from in order to spend additional resources on combatting the primacy effect, as precedent requires; Ga. Ass’n of Latino Elected Officials, 499 F.Supp.3d at 1240 (N.D. Ga. 2020). Because such activities are within the existing mission of the organizational plaintiffs, the alleged diversion of resources is insufficient to establish an injury in fact for purposes of standing. Following Plaintiffs’ argument to its logical conclusion, these organizations would suffer a cognizable injury anytime there is a change in election law or administration about which they wish to provide education or support. Indeed, under such a theory even a change to election laws or rules which these Plaintiffs support would amount to an injury-in-fact because they would have to “divert resources” to educate their members and constituents about the changes so that their members could take advantage of the new provisions.

In addition, Plaintiffs point to steps that they will take in response to SB 202, rather than steps that they have taken to address concrete impacts of the law. [Doc. 57, p. 6]. Thus, the Amended Complaint does not establish that the alleged impacts of SB 202 are occurring now, but that the Plaintiffs anticipate that they will make changes to their activities to address impacts that may occur in the future. To be sure, Plaintiffs are very careful to use affirmative language and avoid qualifiers in their Amended Complaint and in their Response asserting that hypothetical future events definitively “will” happen. Despite their overly confident language, the reality is that Plaintiffs have not demonstrated any concrete past injury, nor have they made a case for the imminent threat of a particularized injury.

However, where a “hypothetical future harm” is not “certainly impending,” plaintiffs “cannot manufacture standing merely by inflicting harm on themselves.” Clapper v. Amnesty Intern. USA, 568 U.S. 398, 416, 422 (2013);

Muransky v. Godiva Chocolatier, Inc., 979 F.3d 917, 931 (11th Cir. 2020) (affirming dismissal of claims for lack of standing based on plaintiff’s claims of injury due to his own efforts to protect against potential identity theft in the future).

B. Plaintiffs Have Failed to Demonstrate that Their Alleged Injuries are Traceable to or Redressable by the County Defendants.

In response to County Defendants’ argument that Plaintiffs’ claims are not traceable to County Defendants, Plaintiffs argue that because County Defendants must implement the provisions at issue, the claims are automatically traceable to them. Predictably, Plaintiffs continue to rely on an improper reading of Jacobson v. Fla. Sec’y of State, 974 F.3d 1236 (11th Cir. 2020) for their position that all that is needed to show causation for standing purposes is redressability, i.e., that the Court could address their injuries by ordering the County Defendants not to enforce the complained-of provisions of SB 202. This position is incomplete and fails to address traceability.

While the Court in Jacobson did state in dicta that “any injury would be traceable only to 67 [county] Supervisors of Elections and redressable only by relief against them,” (Id. at 1253), the issue before the Court was traceability of claims to the Florida Secretary of State, who was the only defendant to the action. Because “the Supervisors are independent officials under Florida law who are not subject to the Secretary's control," the Court held that the plaintiffs' ballot order claims were not traceable to the Secretary of State. Id.

The redressability portion of the Jacobson opinion relies, in large part, on the precedent in Lewis v. Governor of Ala., 944 F.3d 1287, 1296, where the Court held that plaintiffs could not show redressability because the defendant – the Attorney General of Alabama - lacked the authority to enforce the statute at issue. Id., 944 F.3d at 1296-1301. However, neither the Lewis court nor the Jacobson court held that the existence of authority to implement a subject statute is, by itself, dispositive of the traceability question.

Indeed, the Lewis court, expounding upon Lujan v. Defs. of Wildlife, 504 U.S. 555 (1992), made it clear that more is required than simply naming a government party with the ability to enforce the complained of regulation:

...where, as is perhaps typically the case, "the plaintiff is himself an object of the [regulatory] action (or forgone action) at issue," there is "ordinarily little question that the action or inaction has caused him injury, and that a judgment preventing or requiring the action will redress it." But when..."a plaintiff's asserted injury arises from the government's allegedly unlawful regulation (or lack of regulation) of someone else"—there, the funding agencies—"much more is needed" to establish standing. The reason is because "[i]n that circumstance," both the traceability and redressability inquiries "hinge on the response of the regulated (or regulable) third party to the government action or inaction—and perhaps on the response of others as well." In other words, when "[t]he existence of one or more of the essential elements of standing depends on the unfettered choices made by independent actors not before the courts and whose exercise of . . . discretion the courts cannot presume either to control or to predict," plaintiffs must demonstrate that "those choices have been or will be made in such a manner as to produce causation and permit redressability of injury."

Lewis, 944 F.3d 1287, at 1304-05.

In this case the Plaintiffs' claims are based largely upon speculation about unfettered choices made by independent actors. For example, many of the claims in the Amended Complaint focus on how SB 202 will affect absentee voting, but what method to use for voting is a distinctly individual choice that can vary for a person from election to election. Likewise, Plaintiffs make vague projections that they may or may not shift resources around within their budgets to address SB 202, but those budgeting decisions will no doubt be affected by the internal policy and fiscal decisions of its governing board, as well as the decisions of the other 156 counties not named in this suit on how they implement the provisions at issue.

As noted in County Defendants' initial brief, simply naming an arbitrary set of county election officials as defendants does not meet Plaintiffs' burden to demonstrate traceability and redressability. Instead, Plaintiffs must demonstrate how their alleged future injuries are traceable to and redressable by County Defendants' conduct. See, e.g., Hollywood Mobile Estates Ltd. v. Seminole Tribe of Fla., 641 F.3d 1259, 1265 (11th Cir. 2011) (alleged injury cannot "result [from] the independent action of some third party not before the court"). Traceability does not exist where “an independent source would have caused [plaintiff] to suffer the same injury.” Swann v. Sec’y, Georgia, 668 F.3d 1285, 1288 (11th Cir. 2012).

Although Plaintiffs point to several provisions of SB 202 which local elections officials and staff implement – restricted timeframes to request and receive absentee ballots, O.C.G.A. §§ 21-2-381, 21-2-386, the limits on access to drop boxes, id. § 21-2-382, the prohibition against proactive mailing of absentee ballot applications, id., new identification requirements for absentee voting, id. §§ 21-2-381, 21-2-386 – those provisions do not impart any discretion to County Defendants with regard to their implementation. In addition, at least one of the provisions being challenged by Plaintiffs, the criminalization of assistance in returning completed absentee ballot applications, is not enforced by County Defendants but local law enforcement. See O.C.G.A. 21-2-381(a)(C)(ii) (“Handling a completed absentee ballot application by any person or entity other than as allowed in this subsection shall be a misdemeanor.”)

In essence, Plaintiffs seek to place the County Defendants between the proverbial rock and a hard place, demanding that county election officials preemptively defy SB 202 if they don’t wish to be a party to this lawsuit, without any court order or other authority granting the counties permission to ignore the complained-of provisions, or risk having to pay attorney’s fees to Plaintiffs if they follow the requirements of the law. Such an unjust outcome cannot have been the aim of the Court in Jacobson, or any other case which addresses the issue of redressability.

Moreover, Plaintiffs continue to simply argue that they do not have to sue all county election officials in Georgia to obtain the requested relief, even though they allege that their organizations operate throughout the state. [Doc. 35, ¶¶ 15, 29-30, 47, 51, 55]. In doing so the Plaintiffs tacitly admit the relief they seek would lead to “arbitrary and disparate treatment to voters in its different counties,” Bush v. Gore, 531 U.S. 98, 107, 121 S. Ct. 525, 531 (2000), with three counties bound by an order from this Court and the remaining 156 counties following existing law.

While Plaintiffs cite several inapposite cases that stand for the proposition that even a partial remedy would satisfy the requirement of redressability, none of those cases involved enjoining election officials in only certain areas of a state, while leaving the rest of the state unbound by the relief ordered. Instead, courts have repeatedly relied on the Bush opinion for the exact proposition on which County Defendants have set forth – that the Court cannot grant relief which would result in disparate treatment of voters across Georgia. See, e.g., Curling v. Raffensperger, 397 F. Supp. 3d 1334, 1403 (N.D. Ga. 2018) (finding that continued use of voting machines could result in disparate treatment of voters under Bush v. Gore); Black

Voters Matter Fund v. Raffensperger, No. 20-cv-01489-AT, 2020 WL 2079240, at *3 N.D. Ga. 2020) (noting that the injunctive relief requested by plaintiffs “could yield a measure of disparity in postage relief as a practical matter, that would touch on the Court’s weighing of the public interest factor for the June 2020 Election.”). A remedy that leads to unequal treatment of voters based upon which counties Plaintiffs chose to sue would create more problems than it resolves.

Consequently, because Plaintiffs have failed to clearly articulate in their Amended Complaint how their claimed injuries are traceable to and redressable by the County Defendants, they have not carried their burden of demonstrating standing to sue the counties. For all the reasons set forth above and in County Defendants’ Brief in Support of County Defendants’ Motion to Dismiss First Amended Complaint [Doc. 35], County Defendants request that the Court enter an order dismissing all claims against them in Plaintiffs’ First Amended Complaint.

Respectfully submitted this 9th day of August, 2021.
