16 UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT
17 DISTRICT OF ARIZONA

18 Mi Familia Vota, et al.,

19 Plaintiffs,

20 vs.

21 Katie Hobbs, et al.,

22 Defendants.

Case No: 2:21-cv-01423-DWL

DEFENDANTS’ REPLY TO PLAINTIFFS’ OPPOSITION TO MOTION TO STAY (DOC. 58)

1 INTRODUCTION

2 As the State previously explained, its requested 60-day partial stay would conserve 3 the resources of the Court and the parties by delaying consideration of the Anderson- 4 Burdick signature-curing claim until after the Ninth Circuit will have likely issued its 5 decision in Arizona Democratic Party v. Hobbs, Nos. 20-16759, 20-16766 (Hobbs I), 6 resolving essentially identical issues. See Doc. 58. Plaintiffs’ lengthy opposition provides 7 no sound reason for denying that request.

8 Plaintiffs make essentially three arguments against the requested partial stay. First, 9 they argue that Hobbs will not resolve their Anderson-Burdick Signature Requirement 10 Claims and that a stay would be inefficient. Second, they allege a stay will prejudice them.
11 Third, they argue that, in the event the case is not stayed, Arizona Democratic Party v.
12 Hobbs (“Hobbs I”), 976 F.3d 1081 (9th Cir. 2020) is not binding on this court. Each of 13 these arguments fails. And Plaintiffs’ willingness to advance such demonstrably weak 14 contentions in opposition to a short stay, where the stakes are small, is inadvertently 15 revealing as to the merits of their underlying claims.

16 This Court should grant the State’s request for a partial stay.

17 ARGUMENT

18 I. Hobbs I is likely to be largely determinative of Plaintiffs’ claims

19 Plaintiffs’ opposition relies heavily on contending that Hobbs I will not be 20 determinative here as precedent. That is highly doubtful, and the arguments that Plaintiffs 21 offer in support are specious.

22 But, in any event, that is not the relevant inquiry here. Instead, the relevant question 23 here is how best to adjudicate the claims presented efficiently. The State’s proposed stay 24 promotes efficiency and Plaintiffs’ proposed approach is demonstrably wasteful.

25 A. Plaintiffs’ Anderson-Burdick Signature Claim Is Functionally
26 Indistinguishable From That In *Hobbs

27 Plaintiffs’ principal basis for opposing a stay is their contention (at 4) that Hobbs I 28 will “not control the outcome of Plaintiffs’ Anderson-Burdick Claims.” That may or may 1 not be true; notably, under the Ninth Circuit’s published stay opinion Plaintiffs’ claim is 2 functionally doomed unless the Ninth Circuit changes course. In any event, it takes little 3 imagination to conceive of a broad final opinion that would render Plaintiffs’ claim entirely 4 untenable. And even if not completely controlling as a formal matter, the likelihood that 5 the Hobbs I decision will functionally decide the claim at issue here is manifestly high.

6 Plaintiffs’ attempt to distinguish their Anderson-Burdick non-signature curing 7 claim from Hobbs I is unavailing for four reasons.

8 First, Plaintiffs’ reliance (at 4-5) on “cumulative” burdens lacks merit. Plaintiffs 9 nowhere explain how SB 1005’s Signature Requirement is meaningfully “cumulative” 10 with SB 1485’s EVL Periodic Voting Requirement or how this allegation impacts the 11 relevance of Hobbs I. The two challenged regulations are not even related to one another.
12 One requires voters to sign their ballots or cure their failure to do so by close of election 13 day; the other, requires voters to either vote or return a notice after four years of not voting 14 in order to remain on the Early Voting List.

15 Plaintiffs’ Complaint only makes conclusory assertions that these requirements 16 “collectively” burden the right to vote, but they do not explain how that is. Mi Familia 17 Complaint ¶132. This is not like a situation where a State requires registration to a 18 particular party to participate in a primary and then makes voter registration changes 19 unreasonably difficult. See, e.g., Clingman v. Beaver, 544 U.S. 581, 608 (2005) (discussing 20 cumulative burden) (O’Connor, J., concurring). Instead, the two requirements have little 21 in common that could make them “cumulative” in any meaningful sense.

22 But even if these regulations worked hand-in-glove for purposes of Anderson- 23 Burdick, the Ninth Circuit’s evaluation would still be largely decisive on these points with 24 respect to the Signature Requirement. As the State has explained in its stay motion (at 7), 25 the Ninth Circuit has held that the burden presented by the State’s limitation on curing 26 signatures up until when polls closed imposed “at most, a ‘minimal’ burden.” Hobbs I, 976 27 F.3d at 1085. Similarly, as the State explained in its motion to dismiss (at 17-18), the 28 Periodic Voting Requirement imposes a burden less than that presented in Short v. Brown, 1 which itself posed at most an “extremely small one.” 893 F.3d 671, 677 (9th Cir. 2018).

2 Thus, even if Plaintiffs could rely on simple addition for two inapposite burdens, 3 they would at most be adding an “at most . . . minimal” burden to an “extremely small one.”
4 That is distinctly unlikely to sum up to anything other than a minimal burden cumulatively, 5 and certainly is unlikely to become a “severe” burden.

6 Second, Plaintiffs’ suggestion (at 4) that this case is fundamentally different 7 because “Plaintiffs’ claims will be based on a record that reflects what actually happened 8 in the 2020 election” adds nothing. Plaintiffs offer neither evidence nor allegations why 9 data from the 2020 election is likely to change anything. They do not, for example, even 10 allege that the rate of disqualification went up (or down). Moreover, Intervenor-Plaintiffs 11 would have had powerful incentives to submit any such post-2020 evidence to the Ninth 12 Circuit if it would have helped their claims. They tellingly have not.

13 Indeed, the sole fact that Plaintiffs do note about the 2020 election—i.e., that it was 14 an “an election with historic voter turnout,” Opp. at 4—does Plaintiffs no good. That 15 Arizona had historically high rates of turnout in 2020—notwithstanding having the 16 challenged Poll-Close Deadline for non-signature curing in place—certainly does not 17 support Plaintiffs’ allegations that the State has somehow imposes unconstitutionally 18 excessive burdens on voting. Instead, it supports the State’s contention that “Arizona 19 operates one of the most open and generous voting systems in the United States.” MTD at 20 1. That Plaintiffs believe that high turnout somehow proves that Arizona has made it 21 uniquely burdensome to vote is inadvertently revealing about the logical soundness of 22 Plaintiffs’ claims.

23 Third, Plaintiffs’ reliance (at 4) on “what actually motivated the Arizona legislature 24 in 2021 to enact SB 1003,” is irrelevant to the State’s instant stay request. To be sure, that 25 is the central merits inquiry for Plaintiffs’ intentional discrimination claim (assuming 26 Plaintiffs have standing, but see MTD at 7-9). But the State has not moved to stay those 27 claims. And the Anderson-Burdick burden framework is focused on objective burdens and 28 justifications. The Legislature’s actual motivations are irrelevant, as States can rely on 1 “post hoc rationalizations,” can “come up with [their] justifications at any time,” and have 2 no “limit[s]” on the type of “record [they] can build in order to justify a burden placed on 3 the right to vote.” Mays v. LaRose, 951 F.3d 775, 789 (6th Cir. 2020). Plaintiffs’ attempt 4 to distinguish Hobbs I on putative subjective intent thus fails.

5 Fourth, Plaintiffs’ apparent premise—i.e., that binding precedent resolving a 6 challenge involving the same challenged law and same asserted legal violations can never 7 resolve subsequent claims—defies common sense. True, there is no issue preclusion, as 8 “[i]t is a violation of due process for a judgment to be binding on a litigant who was not a 9 party or a privy and therefore has never had an opportunity to be heard.” Parklane Hosiery
10 Co. v. Shore, 439 U.S. 322, 327 n.7 (1979). But binding precedent frequently forecloses 11 future challenges as a practical matter.

12 Under Plaintiffs’ premise, for example, they could assert an Anderson-Burdick 13 challenge to Indiana’s voter-ID law, notwithstanding the Supreme Court’s decision in 14 Crawford v. Marion Cty. Election Bd., 553 U.S. 181 (2008), and claim that Crawford does 15 “not resolve Plaintiffs’ Anderson/Burdick Claims as a matter of law.” Opp.5. They could 16 further offer identical evidence (and nothing more) as in Crawford, since (in their view), 17 they “are entitled to make their case.” Opp.9.

18 But if Plaintiffs were to do so, they likely would be facing potential Rule 11 issues, 19 rather than the completely blank slate that Plaintiffs now envision. The Supreme Court’s 20 resolution of the Anderson-Burdick voter-ID challenge is, as a practical matter, likely to 21 be definitive for everyone going forward absent significant new legal or factual 22 developments. Plaintiffs’ arguments ignore reality and practicalities by contending that the 23 Ninth Circuit’s Hobbs I decision could not possibly be similarly controlling as a practical 24 matter, even if it does not formally “resolve [Plaintiffs’] Claims as a matter of law.”

25 B. Even If Hobbs I Were Only Persuasive Authority, A Stay Is Still 26 Warranted

27 In any event, even if Plaintiffs were correct Hobbs I did not decide their case, a stay 28 is still warranted. What matters here is whether a stay is “efficient” and the extent to which

1 the “independent proceedings which bear upon the case.” Mediterranean Enters., Inc. v.
2 Ssangyong Corp., 708 F.2d 1458, 1465 (9th Cir. 1983) (obtaining a stay “does not require 3 that the issues in such [other] proceedings are necessarily controlling”) (citing Leyva v.
4 Certified Grocers of Cal. Ltd., 593 F.2d 857, 863-64 (9th Cir. 1979)).

5 For all of the reasons explained previously and above, Hobbs I is likely to be highly 6 relevant to the claim at issue here. It is therefore efficient to stay that claim (but not the 7 others) for a short time.

8 Indeed, courts routinely stay decisions pending forthcoming decisions that are 9 likely to be influential on the subsequent case. See, e.g., Ctr. for Biological Diversity v.
10 EPA, No. CV-20-555, 2021 WL 3410974, at *3 (D. Ariz. July 9, 2021) (granting stay 11 pending parallel proceeding in D.C. Circuit, observing that “this approach [of limiting 12 stay] while expeditious would ultimately have been a waste of this Court's resources”); 13 Winters v. Loan Depot, LLC, No. CV-20-01290, 2021 WL 2714747, at *1 (D. Ariz. July 14 1, 2021) (granting stay pending resolution of Ninth Circuit case which could affect court’s 15 jurisdiction); A.B.C. Sand & Rock Co., Inc. v. Maricopa Cty., No. 2:17-CV-1094, 2017 16 WL 2609524, at *2 (D. Ariz. June 16, 2017) (staying case pending result in administrative 17 proceedings); CoBiz Bank v. IMH Special Asset NT 161 LLC, No. CV-15-02321, 2016 WL 18 11728608, at *3 (D. Ariz. June 10, 2016) (staying case pending result in related litigation); 19 Evolutionary Intel., LLC v. Facebook, Inc., No. C 13-4202 SI, 2014 WL 261837, at *2 20 (N.D. Cal. Jan. 23, 2014) (staying case even though one defendant was not bound by 21 parallel proceeding because “simplification of the issues could still occur” because the 22 result of the parallel proceeding would be “strong evidence” in the pending case).

23 Plaintiffs’ contrary contention that a stay would be “simply wasteful” lacks merit 24 even in Plaintiffs’ own telling. True, this Court could duplicate all of the briefing that has 25 already occurred in Hobbs I and then decide the issue itself, subject to potential 26 “supplemental briefing” or “reconsideration ... when there is new relevant case law,” as 27 Plaintiffs suggest (at 5). But even in Plaintiffs’ own description, it is apparent that their 28

1 approach would involve more briefs, not less. And Plaintiffs do not contend those more-2 numerous briefs would be shorter. (They wouldn't.)

3 At bottom, Plaintiffs' suggestion that it is more efficient to duplicate past efforts 4 rather than leverage them in a manner permitting less marginal effort the second time 5 around is simply specious.

6 II. Plaintiffs' Claims of Prejudice Lack Merit

7 Plaintiffs complain (at 6-7) that a sixty-day stay will prejudice them by forcing the 8 parties to delay a portion of their briefing then possibly pick that briefing up again when 9 Hobbs is decided or when the sixty-days has ended. They also observe that sixty days will 10 push this Court incrementally closer to the 2022 election.

11 This first claim of prejudice is not prejudice at all, but efficiency, and fails for the 12 reasons set forth above. And their second claim rings hollow too.

13 Plaintiffs notably have not requested a preliminary injunction, and it is distinctly 14 implausible to expect that this case could be adjudicated to final judgment substantially in 15 advance of the 2022 general election. The median time in this District from filing of a civil 16 suit to trial, for example, is currently 35.7 months.¹ Plaintiffs' expectation that their suit—
17 filed in August 2021 without a preliminary injunction motion—would be fully adjudicated 18 in time for the 2022 primary and general elections, including in sufficient time in advance 19 of voting to avoid issues under Purcell doctrine, was always fanciful. And the non-20 realization of Plaintiffs' unrealistic expectation is not cognizable prejudice.

21 Moreover, Plaintiffs' own conduct further belies their claim of prejudice. Plaintiffs 22 could, for example, have intervened in Hobbs I or filed a parallel action back in June 2020
23 when Hobbs I was filed if they were concerned about obtaining expeditious adjudication 24 of the claim at issue here. Furthermore, if Plaintiffs' overwhelmingly duplicative 25 Anderson-Burdick claim cannot possibly wait for even 60 days, why did Plaintiffs take all 26 14 days allotted to them to file a response to the stay motion?

III. Hobbs I is Binding On This Court

1 Finally, Plaintiffs argue (at 8) that Hobbs I is not binding on this Court because “[i]t 2 had neither the benefit of full briefing or argument nor the luxury of time to methodically 3 consider the record or relevant authority.” These are arguments as to why Hobbs I may be 4 discounted by another court which is not formally bound by it, and might also be relevant 5 in the Ninth Circuit itself. But nothing in those contentions could absolve this Court of its 6 duty to follow the Ninth Circuit’s published opinions as binding precedent. That would 7 not have been the case if the Ninth Circuit had not published Hobbs I. See Ninth Circuit 8 Rule 36-3. But it did, and Intervenor-Plaintiffs did not seek rehearing en banc.

9 “A district court bound by circuit authority, for example, has no choice but to follow 10 it, even if convinced that such authority was wrongly decided.” Hart v. Massanari, 266 11 F.3d 1155, 1175 (9th Cir. 2001). See also McGinley v. Houston, 361 F.3d 1328, 1331 (11th 12 Cir. 2004) (“A circuit court’s decision binds the district courts sitting within its jurisdiction 13 while a decision by the Supreme Court binds all circuit and district courts.”) (citing 18– 14 134 Moore’s Federal Practice—Civil § 134.02 (2003)). A district court lacks authority to 15 second guess adequacy of briefing, argument, and consideration of the decisions of the 16 court of appeals of their circuit; if this were the rule, it is difficult to see how the system 17 could function as district courts could discard inconvenient precedent at will. Plaintiffs’ 18 suggestion otherwise is contrary to hundreds of years of practice in United States courts.

19 Plaintiffs also argue that the Anderson-Burdick inquiry is necessarily fact-specific, 20 so Hobbs I is not decisive. That might be theoretically true, but Plaintiffs have not pointed 21 to any meaningful factual differences that might help them distinguish Hobbs I. Indeed, 22 the sole new fact they raise with any potential relevance—the historically high turnout in 23 2020—actually supports the State. Supra at 3. Because Plaintiffs have not offered any 24 colorable basis for distinguishing their Anderson-Burdick claim from that at issue in the 25 Ninth Circuit’s published stay decision, the Hobbs I stay decision is binding here.

CONCLUSION

26 This Court should grant the State’s Motion for Partial Stay.
