v. Defendant(s) JENA GRISWOLD IN HER OFFICIAL CAPACITY et al.
		Case Number: 2023CV32577
		Division: 209 Courtroom:
Order: Motion to Realign the Secretary of State as a Petitioner (w/attach)

The motion/proposed order attached hereto: DENIED.

The Court holds while Secretary Griswold might have her own personal views of Intervenor Trump, in the context of this litigation she is not antagonistic such that realignment is appropriate.

Regarding Intervenor Trump's concerns as to the efficiencies of trial, the Court has already held that Secretary Griswold's time will be counted against the Petitioners and the Court did so in order to ensure the Intervenors had ample time. Further, the order of presentation will be: (1) Petitioners; (2) Secretary Griswold; (3) Intervenor Trump; and (4) CRSCC. Petitioners will be allowed to put on a rebuttal case to the extent they have time left but any rebuttal case is limited to addressing something unforeseen or regarding a subject matter not addressed in Petitioners' case in chief.

Regarding cross-examinations, to the extent that they so desire, all Parties (including the Intervenors) will be allowed to cross-examine all other Parties' witnesses except that the Intervenors may not cross-examine each others witnesses.

Finally, while the Court does not anticipate this will be an issue, the Court will employ the one touch rule. Meaning the Court will not allow Parties to recall witnesses, but instead will expect the Parties to ask all questions they have of any given witness when that witness is first called.

MOTION TO REALIGN THE SECRETARY OF STATE AS A PETITIONER

Conferral under C.R.C.P. 121 § 15-8

The undersigned counsel has conferred with the Secretary of State’s counsel regarding this motion who opposes the relief sought. Petitioners’ counsel opposes the relief requested. The Intervenor does not oppose the relief requested.

Introduction

This lawsuit is about keeping President Trump from running for office again.

Although the Petitioners brought this action against the Secretary as a Respondent, through her actions the Secretary has aligned herself with the Petitioners, as is most evident by her refusal to accept President Trump's statement of intent, absent an order from this Court. Immediately after Petitioners brought this action, she publicly repeated Petitioners' talking points and unequivocally argued that that President Trump participated in an insurrection and should not be permitted to run for office again. Her positions in this lawsuit consistently oppose President Trump and the Intervenors, even when those positions contradict prior policy. In short, the Secretary is acting in this lawsuit as a Petitioner and should be realigned with Petitioners to allow President Trump to appeal decisions by the Secretary, to ensure a proper order of proof, and, if necessary, to cross-examine witnesses endorsed by the Secretary.

Argument

Colorado law allows a court to realign the parties when the antagonism between the parties shows that they are not properly aligned.¹ In Pine v. Dubon, the court realigned the corporation in a derivative lawsuit from plaintiff. Although corporations are normally aligned with plaintiffs, in that case the court realigned the corporation with defendants because the corporation's economic interests were antagonistic to the plaintiff.² Other Colorado courts have done the same, realigning parties to place them in the proper alignment for the claims in a case.³

Federal courts follow the same logic when determining proper jurisdiction.⁴ As the Supreme Court has said, litigation is not meant to be “a game of chess,” and the Court does not apply strict rules to determine “[w]hether the necessary collision of interests exists,” but ascertains that collision “from the principal purpose of the suit and the primary and controlling matter in dispute.”⁵ “The courts, not the parties, are responsible for aligning the parties according to their interests in the litigation.”⁶

I. The Secretary refuses to fulfill her statutory duty and accept President Trump’s Statement of Intent.

The Secretary has admitted that she has no explicit authority to disqualify President Trump from appearing on the Republican Party Presidential Preference Primary ballot: “the Election Code does not explicitly give the Secretary independent authority to determine whether a candidate is disqualified from holding office under Section 3 of the Fourteenth Amendment.”⁷ Yet on October 11, 2023, she stated that she received President Trump’s statement of intent, but now refuses to certify President Trump to the ballot, absent a court order.⁸ In short, she currently has refused to fulfill her duty to execute Colorado's election laws knowing that those laws do not permit her to exclude President Trump from the ballot in this situation.

II. The Secretary prejudged President Trump's guilt regarding whether he engaged in or incited an "insurrection" on January 6, 2021.

The Secretary's overall posture is antagonistic to President Trump and should be aligned with Petitioners. She has loudly publicized her contempt for President Trump, her belief that he both instigated and engaged in an insurrection on January 6, 2023, and her demand that he should be barred from running for re-election. Here are a few examples:

- In a speech following reelection last year, the Secretary stated that President Trump tried to steal the election, is a liar, and is a threat to our Democracy: "The former president of the US in his thwarted effort to steal the presidency has opened a new chapter in the history of the United States. The use of conspiracies and lies incited an insurrection at the US Capital in hopes of stopping the peaceful transfer of power on July 6 [sic]."⁹

- On August 19, 2023, the Secretary stated, “It’s a novel situation, as all of this has been, given the former president tried to steal the 2020 election, and his assault on democracy has not stopped.”
- On September 6, 2023, the day of Petitioners’ lawsuit, she issued a press release agreeing with Petitioners, arguing “the January 6th insurrection and attempt[ed] to overturn the 2020 Presidential Election.”¹⁰
- Also, on September 6 she took her message to local and national media, stating “This is an unprecedented situation. We’ve never had a president incite an insurrection and attack our democracy like this.”¹¹
- And again, on the day of this lawsuit: “Look, Donald Trump tried to steal the 2020 election, it was a blatant attack on the United States and the American people. It’s a blatant attack on the fundamental right to vote.”¹²

In other words, the Secretary has taken a strong stand that President Trump: 1) incited an insurrection; 2) is disqualified from being President; and 3) is a danger to democracy in the United States. Her unrelenting hostility to President Trump's position in this case shows that the Secretary's interests are antagonistic to President Trump's interests. The "collision of interests," as articulated by Colorado courts, are straightforward; both Petitioners and the Secretary want to bar President Trump from running for President again. But whether President Trump may appear on the ballot is the "principal purpose of the suit and the "primary and controlling matter in dispute."¹³

III. The Secretary has aligned herself with Petitioners in this matter.

Further, the Secretary has actively aligned herself with Petitioners in this matter. She admitted in The Secretary of State's Omnibus Response to Motions to Dismiss (the "Omnibus Response"), that she is aligned with Petitioners, arguing "In light of the prima facie showing presented in the Verified Petition and the evidence cited there, the Secretary believes that Mr. Trump incited the insurrection."¹⁴ As shown above in Section I, this statement is consistent the Secretary's long-standing and loudly-publicized official position. To be sure, the Secretary implies that the Verified Petition caused her to believe that President Trump should be barred. In fact, however, she has maintained that position for a long time.

Furthermore, at every step in the litigation the Secretary has proven herself to be aligned with the Petitioners. She supported Petitioner's Motion to Remand this matter to state from federal court, she supports Petitioner's use of Sections 113 and 1204, she has joined Petitioners in opposing discovery, and she has joined Petitioners' efforts to dismiss President Trump's Special Motion to Dismiss. Her actions before this Court show that she opposes President Trump's efforts to appear on Republican Presidential Preference ballot.

IV. Re-alignment will facilitate the litigation of this matter.

Re-alignment is important from a litigation perspective. First, re-alignment puts the aligned parties on the same side of the case for purposes of the hearings in this matter. The Court should receive orderly presentation of evidence. To the extent the Secretary will present any evidence, it should be presented before evidence presented by President Trump and Intervenor (the Colorado Republican Party), giving them the opportunity to understand the case against them prior to putting on their testimony.¹⁵ This also clarifies who bears the burden of proof; it is the Secretary, along with the Petitioners, because her arguments and positions impose upon her the burden of proof as an actual petitioner.¹⁶ Further, to the extent the Secretary would want to examine witnesses, she should not be permitted to cross-examine Petitioners' witnesses by claiming they are hostile witnesses. She, like Petitioners, should be properly limited to direct examination of those witnesses. Finally, this case is a matter of public interest. The public deserves an honest presentation of the real interests of parties, and realignment will present to the public the Secretary's proper position in this high-profile, highly consequential litigation.

Conclusion

The Secretary has never been neutral in this matter. She has pre-judged President Trump, loudly and publicly declaring her support for Petitioners. She has consistently taken legal positions in opposition to President Trump. The Secretary's position in opposition to President Trump should be clearly reflected in the position of the parties in this litigation, and the Court should realign her as a petitioner.

FOR THESE REASONS, the court should realign the Secretary of State with Petitioners in this matter, and also grant Donald J. Trump all such further relief as is just, proper or appropriate.
